

Sinclair Broadcasting, according to the Washington Post, plans to air a documentary of exceedingly partisan bias days before the 2004 Presidential election. This shows extreme contempt by Sinclair for the FCC rules, the regulators, and the entire concept of public airwaves.

Not only is this important to our democracy to prohibit partisan broadcasting on public airwaves, it's essential to the survival of the FCC. Should Sinclair get away with their attempt to bias a Presidential election, you know what will be next: a "documentary" showing that the FCC is overstaffed and unnecessary and a call for disbanding it.

I urge you to investigate Sinclair immediately, not just for American democracy but for your own jobs.
